Pathways to Prosperity 2017 National Conference Canada's Place in the World: Innovation in Immigration Research, Policy, and Practice

November 15 – 17, 2017 | Hilton Hotel, Toronto

The Pathways to Prosperity Annual National Conference will take place in Toronto on November 16 and 17, 2017. As we approach the end of the year in which we are celebrating Canada's 150th birthday, it is apt that we reflect on current Canadian innovation in immigration research, policy, and practice, and look ahead to how we may continue to demonstrate our leadership in this area. Thus, the theme of this year's conference is Canada's Place in the World: Innovation in Immigration Research, Policy, and Practice. The conference will include plenary sessions, workshops, roundtables, poster presentations, a special keynote speaker, a theatrical production, and opportunities to network with colleagues.

On Wednesday November 15, 2017, we will be hosting two full-day preconferences: A preconference for the Local Immigration Partnerships and the Réseaux en immigration francophone; and a preconference on Developing Immigrants' Literacy and Essential Skills.

On the evening of Thursday November 16, we are pleased to be presenting the theatrical production — We Are Not the Others — a play created by Dr. Mirna Carranza and Izad Etemadi, based on the findings of a two-year research project examining immigrant women's experiences. The play was first presented at the Hamilton Fringe Festival in July 2017.

We are not the others.
We are just like you.

On Friday November 17, join us as we kick off the second day of the conference with a special keynote address by the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, chair of the World Refugee Council and former Minister of Immigration.

English-French simultaneous interpretation will be provided throughout the conference and pre-conferences.

Registration is filling quickly and we encourage interested parties to register soon to avoid disappointment. To register for the pre-conferences and conference, please click here. Note that early bird registration closes on October 6, 2017.

To book a hotel room at the conference hotel, the Hilton in downtown Toronto, please click here. Note that conference rates for hotel rooms are on a first-come first-served basis and space may become limited.

The Honourable
Lloyd Axworthy

Building Bridges between Indigenous and Immigrant Communities

Historically there has been little effort to bring together immigrant and indigenous communities, and to promote harmonious relations between these groups. Rather than gaining knowledge of indigenous history and culture, immigrants have often either been uninformed or presented with misinformation and stereotypes. This session focuses on strategies that can be implemented to remedy this situation and create mutual understanding, including several notable promising practices that are being used in various locations across the country to build bridges between indigenous and immigrant communities.

Intercultural Dialogue and Mediation for Living Together

The diversity of immigrants to Canada today and their relations with each other and with more established communities have posed new challenges in terms of the potential for conflict and misunderstanding. In addition to supporting welcoming communities, we must now address intercultural relations within local communities, cities, and regions, bringing communities and individuals together for intercultural dialogue and mediation of potentially conflicting situations. This session provides examples of such strategies that have been used effectively to promote harmony and living together in diversity.

New Strategies for Determining the Effectiveness of Settlement Programs

As the number of immigrants to Canada continues to rise, it is more than ever of central importance to ensure their successful settlement and integration into Canadian society. A variety of novel and well established settlement programs are being provided to new immigrants to support their settlement and integration, but empirical evidence as to their effectiveness and empirically-driven identification of promising practices are somewhat lacking. This session will discuss methods of assessing the effectiveness of settlement programs and identification of promising practices, including the use of pre-existing datasets and new strategies for data collection.

Understanding and Addressing Public Anxiety about Immigration

Though Canada is defined as a nation of immigrants and we pride ourselves on our openness to diversity, there is often underlying public anxiety about immigration, and recent surveys suggest that this anxiety is particularly salient at this time. This session explores the determinants and drivers of public anxiety surrounding immigration, and discusses strategies for allaying fears and concerns that individuals and groups have about the role of immigration in our nation-building, and for supporting more favorable attitudes that benefit us all.

What Have We Learned about Refugee Resettlement? Lessons from the Syrian Refugee Program

The large-scale resettlement of Syrian refugees in Canada has presented both challenges and successes. Stepping back from the publicity surrounding the Syrian Refugee Project, what have we learned about refugee resettlement from the experiences over the last two years and where should we put our future efforts in this regard? The speakers in this session will discuss strategies that can be implemented to assist refugees in the process from pre-arrival to integration. The lessons learned can be applied not only to future large-scale resettlement projects, but also to refugee resettlement in Canada more generally.

- ◆ Gerry Mills, Executive Director, Immigrant Services Association of Nova Scotia
- ◆ Ümit Kiziltan, Director General, Research and Evaluation, Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada, and Fraser Valentine, Director General, Refugee Affairs, Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada

Preconference on Developing Immigrants' Literacy and Essential Skills

The Preconference on Developing Immigrants' Literacy and Essential Skills focuses on the results of a research project that aimed to assess the effects of improved levels of literacy and essential skills on the socio-economic integration of francophone immigrants, with a particular focus on workplace performance. The research project followed francophone immigrants (both those enrolled in educational programs and those not enrolled) to compare their outcomes. The results inform a cost-benefit analysis that assesses the return on investment of training in literacy and essential skills, which will be presented at the preconference. This preconference is organized by Actions Interculturelles and Pathways to Prosperity Partnership.
