Borders, Welcoming Communities, and the Politicization of Immigration: Challenges and Opportunities Surrounding the Dynamic Movement of People

November 22-23, 2018 | Hyatt Regency Hotel, Montreal

We are pleased to announce that registration is now open for the Sixth Annual Pathways to Prosperity National Conference to take place in Montreal on Thursday and Friday, November 22-23, 2018. preconference, please turn to page 3. Join researchers, service providers, Local Immigration Partnerships, Réseaux en immigration francophone, representatives of all levels of government, and others working in the area of immigration for a three-day event on immigration in an increasingly complex environment. The theme of this year's P2P Conference is Borders, Welcoming Communities, and the Politicization of Immigration: Challenges and Opportunities Surrounding the Dynamic Movement of People. The crossing of borders and the politicization of immigration are increasingly salient issues for Canadians and internationally, yet we must not lose focus on the fact that a successful immigration program includes welcoming communities and recognition of the individual people involved in migration. The conference will address the challenges and opportunities these facets of immigration present to us today. The conference will include plenary sessions, workshops, a poster session, and opportunities to network with colleagues. More than 400 attendees are expected to participate.

Pathways to Prosperity Governance Updates

Lynn Weaver

Pathways to Prosperity has had a number of governance changes over the last couple of months. Of note, we thank Scott Fisher from Professions North for his years of service as co-chair of the Pathways to Prosperity Standing Committee on Northern, Rural, and Remote Communities and wish him well in his continuing efforts to support newcomers to Canada. We welcome Lynn Weaver from Cowichan Intercultural Society as new co-chair of that committee with continuing co-chair, Jamie Baker, and we look forward to new ideas and activities from this committee.

Awish Aslam

We also thank Claudia Prévost from Laval University and Serperi Sevgur from Dalhousie University for serving as co-chairs of the Pathways to Prosperity Standing Committee on Student Engagement for two years, and we welcome Jessica Losier from University of Ottawa and Awish Aslam from Western University as the incoming co-chairs. We thank Claudia and Serperi for their dedication to Pathways to Prosperity and their willingness to support the new co-chairs during the transition, and we wish Claudia and Serperi well as they move along in their studies. We look forward to working with Jessica and Awish, as well as the rest of the committee members, who bring new ideas and life to Pathways to Prosperity. One change that has now been implemented is the expansion of the Standing Committee on Student Engagement to include postdoctoral researchers on the committee.

NEW REPORT

Pathways to Prosperity Funded Project

Are SMEs with Immigrant Owners Exceptional Exporters?

By Horatio M. Morgan, Ryerson University, Sui Sui, Ryerson University, and Matthias Baum, University of Kaiserslautern, Germany

Do the knowledge, language skills, experience, and contacts of immigrant business owners constitute valuable resources when conducting business globally? Or do these attributes make them overconfident, and therefore less able to derive advantages from internationalizing?

Immigrants are generally recognized for their strong entrepreneurial orientation. When they start businesses in Canada, they are more likely to engage in exporting than others. As exporters, immigrant owners are also more likely to target global markets. Their enhanced ability to do so is largely attributed to their first-hand knowledge of foreign markets, foreign language skills, international work or business experience, and foreign contacts. This could mean they are also better positioned than others to identify, evaluate, develop, and exploit opportunities in global markets.

In sum, we expect immigrant owners to be experts when it comes to exporting activity — they should export more and earn more than comparable businesses with Canadian-born owners.

Prior research has confirmed the first expectation, but has left us in the dark on the second.

In our recently published Journal of Business Venturing article, we contribute by addressing this research gap. We analyzed the export activity and profitability (adjusted for risk) of 9,977 small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in Canada. We found that immigrant businesses export more, but earn less, than their Canadian-born counterparts. Why?

As it turns out, an immigrant background can be a double-edged sword: while it embodies knowledge and other enabling attributes that are particularly helpful for conducting business globally, having such resources seem to engender overconfidence in immigrant owners at levels that distort their evaluation of excessively risky foreign markets. They apparently take on more risk than they should, and their performance suffers when things go wrong. Therefore, more business counselling services should be incorporated in support programs that are designed for immigrant entrepreneurs.

Retaining International Students in Canada Post-Graduation: Understanding the Motivations and Drivers of the Decision to Stay

Over the last decade, the enrollment of international students at Canadian educational institutions has been rapidly increasing. For example, from 2010 to 2017 there was a 119 percent increase in the number of international students studying in Canada. This is not surprising given the recent commitment of the Canadian Government to increasing the number of international students studying in Canada, and the policies put into place to support this goal.

One important rationale for increasing the number of international students in Canada is the potential for international students to seek permanent residency post-graduation. International students are seen as ideal candidates for permanent residency due to their proficiency in English and/or French, their Canadian education credentials, and their Canadian work experience.

In this context, a project was launched as a partnership among Pathways to Prosperity, World Education Services, and the Canadian Bureau for International Education. The goal of this project was to address the following questions: 1) What are prospective international students' expectations regarding their transition to permanent resident status in Canada? and 2) Once in Canada, what factors (demographic, economic, sociocultural, academic) predict international students' intentions to seek permanent residency and to work in Canada post-graduation? In particular, we focused on why international students wish to stay in Canada post-graduation, what the characteristics are of those who are especially likely to plan to apply for permanent residency, and what economic, socio-cultural, and academic factors drive the intention to apply for permanent residency.

To answer these questions, we analyzed data from two surveys: a survey of prospective international students prior to their arrival in Canada and a survey of international students at postsecondary institutions in Canada. The analyses indicated that a large proportion of prospective and current international students plan to work in Canada after graduation and intend to apply for permanent residency. While there may be variation depending on international students' country of origin, some of the reasons why international students intend to stay in Canada include better job opportunities and a higher standard of living in Canada. The strong relation between plans to work in Canada and intentions to apply for permanent residency suggest that those who are planning to stay will endeavour to work, thus contributing to the Canadian economy.

In order to increase the retention of international students, the research suggests that efforts should be directed toward providing pre-arrival information to potential international students about the opportunities to work and stay in Canada. Efforts should also be directed at the integration of international students during their studies, including through facilitating friendships with Canadians and Canadian work experience. Prospective international students seem to expect support from their educational institutions to secure employment after graduation, particularly in the form of assisting them to establish professional connections in Canada. To fulfill this expectation, mentorship and networking opportunities to build professional connections are crucial. Perhaps most importantly, employment opportunities for international students post-graduation are essential as part of any strategy designed to retain these individuals as a skilled workforce in Canada long-term. Without meaningful work, these individuals are likely to move to greener pastures where their skills will be appreciated in the labour market. For more details of this research, click here.

Based on this very successful partnership, we are now turning our attention to research designed to address the more long-term outcomes of international students in Canada (e.g., in terms of success in achieving employment and obtaining permanent residency). This research will also focus on lessons learned and challenges that international students have encountered along the road to becoming fully integrated into Canadian society.

Lambton County Receives Funding from the Government of Ontario for the Anti-Racism Arts Project (ARAP)

Submitted by: Lambton County

The Anti-Racism Arts Project is a unique program funded by the Government of Ontario, through the Municipal Innovation Fund (MIF). This project aims to address racism, discrimination and bias that may be experienced by newcomers, immigrants, refugees and racialized communities, while promoting cultural diversity and celebrating the benefits immigration brings to communities like Lambton.

There are three main aspects of the project:

1. Art workshops: Facilitated by artists, these workshops are designed for community members who have experienced and/or want to learn more about racism and discrimination. The intention of these workshops is to inspire individuals to create opportunities for positive change and growth in Sarnia-Lambton. To date over 200 community members have attended these workshops, with more to come in the future.
2. Student Art Challenge: This multi-media art challenge invited all students in Grades 7-12 to submit work reflecting on diversity and anti-racism. Six prizes were awarded for the top three entries in both the senior and junior categories.
3. Sustainable Program Facilitation: A committee will be struck to oversee an anti-racism campaign with relevant activities that will ensure that efforts to educate, inform and promote community solidarity will continue long after the funding agreement with MCI has expired. This committee will consist of local leaders and change makers who have a stake in making Lambton a safe, culturally aware and welcoming community for all.

The County of Lambton is very grateful for the funding provided by the Government of Ontario for the Anti-Racism Arts Project. To know more about the initiative, contact Stephanie Ferrera at this email or visit the Facebook page @SarniaLambtonLIP.

The CAFi Receives Funding From IRCC for Three Projects

Submitted by: The CAFi

The Centre d'accueil et d'accompagnement des francophones immigrants au sud-est du Nouveau-Brunswick (CAFi) has received important funding from Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) in order to develop three projects from April 1, 2018 to March 31, 2019. Thanks to this funding, we were able to hire Dominik Robichaud, a therapist who uses art as a form of therapy to help Syrian newcomers suffering from anxiety, stress, and post-traumatic stress disorder. Mrs. Robichaud is the only person to offer this type of service in French in the Atlantic Provinces. Philippe Le Voguer, a social worker, will lead a project intended to help men who experience difficulties after immigrating to New Brunswick. This service offers a safe and confidential environment where men can express their feelings and talk about their challenges while creating networks with other newcomers who are facing the same issues. Third and finally, educator Amira Khedhri will lead a project called "Franco-JeunesNB" (Franco-YouthNB). The goal is to bring after-school educational support to young Syrians as many of these young people cannot rely on their parents' support for homework because of language barriers. This will allow for a quicker integration in the New Brunswick Francophone school system. The CAFi would like to recognize and thank IRCC for its generous financial contribution.

Last year was the first time since 1980 that did not happen, according to the Pew Research Centre. The Trudeau government has promised to increase the number of government assisted refugees to 10,000 annually by 2020 (up from its current 7,500 per year). The government said that it expects annual private refugee sponsorships to rise up to 20,000 by 2020 — a year that might put Canada above America in absolute numbers for the first time.

"If the United States returns to a place where refugees can get a fair hearing, then fine, but right now, they are engaged in a total and complete renegeing on all the fundamental commitments of refugee law and treaties and agreements and we should not be part of it."

- ◆ Globe and Mail — July 6, 2018 — Ontario, Federal Government Battle Over Resettling Migrants: Ontario has withdrawn its support for the resettlement of asylum seekers who are crossing the border illegally, with Premier Doug Ford saying that the federal government created the problem and should bear the full burden of fixing it.
